Linda's Secrets for better composition...Rules to live by...or not!

Whether you're a serious photographer or a person who just takes their "point and shoot" on vacation, Linda's presentation will have you looking at the natural world with new eyes, giving you ideas to improve the impact of your images.

Pole to Pole ~ From Penguins to Polar Bears

Even before Linda became an expedition photographer on ships to the polar regions, she visited the Arctic Circle and the Antarctic every year since 2006. Linda will take us on a photographic journey to the wildest of places, where she has braved elements few of us would dare, shooting wildlife at temperatures of 60 degrees below zero.

Linda's international accolades include 2009 Travel Photographer of the Year finalist, 2007 Nature's Best Award and currently she won the Windland Smith Rice Award which has her work on display at the Smithsonian Institute Natural History Museum. Along with being published in numerous magazines, books & calendars, Linda recently won a National Geographic Photo contest and will be published in this iconic magazine shortly.

"To see the world through Linda's eyes is an experience few can forget. With an arresting portfolio of northern lights to her fabulous collection of Polar Bears and penguins, this intrepid explorer of light and life takes us where most of us, only dream to go."
